, "All , the 1 his

nd nd

œ T 5

the

name of Animal Magnetism, prayer; eloquence, self-healing; and the wiss inquiry of the intellect,—What is truth? and of the affections, name of children. These are examples of Reason's momentary. saying, that the knowledge of man is an evening knowledge, vespertina cogf a house; and beyond its house, a world, and beyond its heat Cæsar The problem of man is an evening knowledge, matutina comition. actual and the ideal force of man is happily figured by the schoolmen, it; to pure spirit, it is fluid, it is volatile, and beyond its world, a heaven saying, that the knowledge of man is an evening knowledge man is a constant which is a cons sceptre, the exertions of a power which exists not in time or space, but a to pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, steptre, the exertions of a power which exists not in time or space, but a to pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, is the absence of instantaneous in-streaming causing power. The difference but a to pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, is the absence of instantaneous in-streaming causing power. The difference but a to pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, is the absence of instantaneous in-streaming causing power. The difference but a to pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, is the absence of instantaneous in-streaming causing power. The difference but a to pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, is the absence of instantaneous in-streaming causing power. The difference but a to pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, is the absence of instantaneous in-streaming causing power. The difference but a to pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, in the absence of the pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, in the absence of the pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, in the absence of the pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, in the absence of the pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, in the absence of the pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, in the absence of the pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, in the absence of the pass what my poet said; 'Nature is not fixed but fluid said and the pass when the pa dom of children. These are examples of Reason's momentary grasp of the is good? by yielding itself passive is not fixed but fluid. Spirit alters, sceptre, the exertions of a power which exists not in time or annually grasp of the intellect,—What is truth, and or with a shall we come the intellect,—What is truth, and it is truth, and Shakers; many obscure and yet contested facts, now arranged under tishall we come to look at the world with new eyes. It shall answer the name of Animal Magnetism; prayer; eloquence. self-hankers.

words, thought is devout, and devotion is thought. Deep calls unto deep. sagreeable appearances, swine, spiders, and shall be no more seen. The But in actual life, the marriage is not celebrated. There are innocentation is sagreeable appearances. They are temporary and shall a the wind exhale. As who worship God often the same innocentation is the sagreeable appearances. united with himself. He cannot be a naturalist, until he satisfies all theild, therefore your own world will unfold its great proportions. A correspondements of the spirit. Love is as much its demand. As naturalist. the unfound infinite? No man ever prayed heartily, without learning some- which enchants it, it shall draw beautiful faces, and warm hearts, and wise thing. But when a faithful thinker, resolute to detach every classic propersonal relations. understanding. Is not prayer also a study of truth,—a sally of the soul into maments along its path, and carry with it faces, and warm hearts, thing. But when a fact of the prayer also a study of truth,—it is soul into maments along its path, and carry with it faces, and warm hearts, and the unfound infinite? No man ever prayed heartily, without learning. naturalists, but they freeze their subject under the wintry light of the f the earth becomes green before it, so shall the beauty it visits, and wise the unfound infinite? No. has not yet extended to the use of all their faculties. And there are patient hen the summer comes from the south, the advancing spirit create its naturalists, but they freeze their subject under the winter 12-1. who worship God after the tradition of their fathers, but their sense of duty ador and filths of nature, the south, the snow-banks melt, and the face has not yet extended to the use of all their faculties. And there are innocent men is, enemies, vanish; they are temporary and snau up, and the wind exhale. As who worship God after the tradition of their fathers, but their sense of duty ador and filths of nature, the south, the snow-banks melt, and the reate its naturalists. But there is a supplied to the use of all their faculties. And there is a supplied to the use of all their faculties. And there is a supplied to the use of all their faculties. And there is a supplied to the use of all their faculties. But in actual life, the marriage is not celebrated. There are innocent men is, enemies, vanish; they are temporary and shall dry up, and the wind exhale. As who worship God after the tradition of their fathers, but their care. demands of the spirit. Love is as much its demand, as perception. Indeed, re idea in your mind, that will attend the influx of the spirit. So fast will words, thought in James without the other. In the uttermost monds, thought in James will attend the influx of the spirit. So fast will words, thought in James will attend the influx of the spirit. So fast will neither can be perfect without the other. In the uttermost monds, thought in James will attend the influx of the spirit. kindle science with the fire of the holiest affections, then will God go forth personal relations, and see it in the light of thought, shall, at the same time, wise, therefore, a fact is true poetry, and the most beautiful of fables. These a child? What is sleep? To our blindness, these things seem unaffecting. We solved by your hands. It were a wise inquiry for the closet,4 to compare, question occupies your intellect, nature brings it in the concrete to be and their social life, poverty, labor, sleep, fear, fortune, are known to you wonders are brought to our own door. You also are a man. Man and woman, the gaudy fable fades and shrivels. We behold the real higher law. To the higher law of the mind. But when the fact is seen under the light of an idea, make fables to hide the baldness of the fact and conform it, as we say, to the What is a day? What is a year? What is summer? What is woman? What is the rise and progress of ideas in the mind. point by point, especially at remarkable crises in life, our daily history, with hath its roots in the faculties and affections of the mind. Whilst the abstract Learn that none of these things is superficial, but that each phenomenon The invariable mark of wisdom is to see the miraculous in the common It will not need, when the mind is prepared for study, to search for objects anew into the creation.

axis of things, and so they appear not transparent but opake. The reason whies of ploughed land; or a scholar's garret, though without fine names the world lacks unity, and lies broken and in heaps, is, hereason white with himself it. by the redemption of the soul. The ruin or the blank, that we see when wdd, you have and can be ruin own eye. The axis of vision is not coimald. the world lacks unity, and lies broken and in heaps, is, because man is disjut, your dominion is as great as theirs, though without fine names.

united with himself. He cannot be a naturalist, until he serice. In the control of the many with the many with the control of look at nature, is in our own eye. The axis of vision is not coincident with theed his house, Rome; you perhaps call yours, a cobler's trade; a hundred axis of things, and so they appear not transparent but onake. Therefore, is in our own eye. The axis of vision is not coincident with theed his house, Rome; you perhaps call yours, a cobler's trade; a hundred early on the perhaps call yours, a cobler's trade; a hundred point for look at nature, is in our own eye. The axis of vision is not coincident with theed his house, Rome; you perhaps call yours, a cobler's trade; a hundred to have and can do. Adam called his house, a cobler's trade; a hundred to have and can do. Adam called his house, a cobler's trade; a hundred look at nature, is in our own eye. The axis of vision is not coincident with theed his house, Rome; you perhaps call yours, a cobler's trade; a hundred look at nature, is in our own eye. The axis of vision is not coincident with theed his house, Rome; you perhaps call yours, a cobler's trade; a hundred look at nature, is in our own eye. The axis of vision is not coincident with theed his house, Rome; you perhaps call yours, a cobler's trade; a hundred look at nature, is in our own eye. The axis of vision is not coincident with theed his house, Rome; you perhaps call yours, a cobler's trade; a hundred look at nature, is in our own eye. The axis of vision is not coincident with theed his house, Rome; you perhaps call yours, a cobler's trade; a hundred look at nature, is in our own eye. The axis of vision is not coincident with theed his house, Rome; you perhaps call yours, a cobler's trade; a hundred look at nature, and have a look at nature, and have a look at lo The problem of the soul. The ruin or the blank that the world exists for you. For you is the redemption of the soul. The ruin or the blank that the world exists for you. For you is the redemption of the soul. The ruin or the blank that cognitio.

We then, that the world exists for you. For you is the redemption of you is the redemption of the soul. For you is the redemption of the soul. The ruin or the blank that me are, that we are, that only can we see. All that Adam had, all that Cæsar is the redemption of the soul. The ruin or the blank that me are, that we are, that only can we see. All that Adam had, all that Cæsar is the redemption of the soul. The ruin or the blank that me are, that we are, that only can we see. All that Adam had, all that Cæsar is the redemption of the soul. The ruin or the blank that me are, that we are, that only can we see. All that Adam had, all that Cæsar is the redemption of the soul. The ruin or the blank that me are, that we are, that only can we see. All that Adam had, all that Cæsar is the redemption of the soul. The ruin or the blank that me are, that we are, that only can we see. All that Adam had, all that Cæsar is the redemption of the soul. The ruin or the blank that me are, that we are, that only can we see. All that Adam had, all that Cæsar is the redemption of the soul. w then, that the world exists for you. For you is the phenomenon perangdom of man over nature, which cometh not with observation, 5-a dominon such as now is beyond his dream of God,—he shall enter without more wonder than the blind man feels who is gradually restored to perfect sight.

The American Scholar

Mr. President, and Gentlemen, is one of hope, and, perhaps, not enough of labor. We do not meet for games of strength or skill, for the recitation of histories, tragedies and odes, like the ancient Greeks; for parliaments of love and poesy, like the Troubadours; nor for the advancement of science, like our cotemporaries in the British and European capitals. Thus far, our holiday has been simply a friendly sign of the I greet you on the re-commencement of our literary year.<sup>2</sup> Our anniversary survival of the love of letters amongst a people too busy to give to letters any the time is already come, when it ought to be, and will be something else, more. As such, it is precious as the sign of an indestructible instinct. Perhaps

5. Luke 17.20.

1. The text printed here is that of the first publication (1837) as a pamphlet titled An Oration, the cation (1837) as a pamphlet title Kappa Society at cation (1837) as a pamphlet kappa Society at cation (1837) as a pamphlet kappa she title Delinered before the Phi Beta Kappa Somethet title Delinered Magust 31, 1837, By changing the title Delinered Magust 31, 1837, When he republished Cambridge, August 31, 1837, when he republished to "The American Scholar" when he republished h in Nature, Addresses, and Lectures (1849), Emer-

audience than this first group.

audience than this first group.

2. Also a reference to the academic year tradison made clear that he was addressing a larger tionally beginning in September.

ionally beginning in September.

3. Poets of southern France, especially Provence, in the 12th and 13th centuries.

commitments to sexual equality and celibacy, the Shakers were founded in England in 1747 and moved to America in 1774; like the Quakers, they preached the importance of attending to 9. A Protestant millenarian sect known for its prince of Hohenlohe (1794–1849), reputed miracle heater.

Medieval scholastic philosophers. Psalm 42.7.

when the sluggard intellect of this continent will look from under its iron lids and fill the postponed expectation of the world with something better than star in the constellation Harp which now flames in our zenith, astronomers announce, shall one day be the pole-star<sup>4</sup> for a thousand years. around us are rushing into life, cannot always be fed on the sere remains of ticeship to the learning of other lands, draws to a close. The millions that the exertions of mechanical skill. Our day of dependence, our long apprenselves. Who can doubt that poetry will revive and lead in a new age, as the foreign harvests. Events, actions arise, that must be sung, that will sing them-

SCHOLAR. Year by year, we come up hither to read one more chapter of his nature of our association, seem to prescribe to this day,—the AMERICAN biography. Let us inquire what new lights, new events and more days have thrown on his character, his duties and his hopes. In the light of this hope, I accept the topic which not only usage, but the

It is one of those fables, which out of an unknown antiquity, convey an unlooked for wisdom, that the gods, in the beginning, divided Man into men, that he might be more helpful to himself; just as the hand was divided into fingers, the better to answer its end.

state, these functions are parcelled out to individuals, each of whom aims to do his stint of the joint work, whilst each other performs his. The fable implies a farmer, or a professor, or an engineer, but he is all. Man is priest, and and that you must take the whole society to find the whole man. Man is not scholar, and statesman, and producer, and soldier. In the divided or social Man,—present to all particular men only partially, or through one faculty; good finger, a neck, a stomach, an elbow, but never a man. amputation from the trunk, and strut about so many walking monsters,—a be gathered. The state of society is one in which the members have suffered this fountain of power, has been so distributed to multitudes, has been so labor to embrace all the other laborers. But unfortunately, this original unit, that the individual to possess himself, must sometimes return from his own minutely subdivided and peddled out, that it is spilled into drops, and cannot The old fable covers a doctrine ever new and sublime; that there is One who is Man sent out into the field to gather food, is seldom cheered by any idea of the true dignity of his ministry. He sees his bushel and his cart, and by the routine of his craft, and the soul is subject to dollars. The priest becomes a form; the attorney, a statute-book; the mechanic, a machine; the nothing beyond, and sinks into the farmer, instead of Man on the farm. sailor, a rope of a ship. The tradesman scarcely ever gives an ideal worth to his work, but is ridden Man is thus metamorphosed into a thing, into many things. The planter, tim of society, he tends to become a mere thinker, or, still worse, the parrot the right state, he is, Man Thinking. In the degenerate state, when the vic-In this distribution of functions, the scholar is the delegated intellect. In of other men's thinking. contained. Him nature solicits, with all her placid, all her monitory pictures. In this view of him, as Man Thinking, the whole theory of his office6 is

> school, and consider him in reference to the main influences he receives. scholar errs with mankind and forfeits his privilege. Let us see him in his Him the past instructs. Him the future invites. Is not, indeed, every man a student, and do not all things exist for the student's behoof? And, finally, is things have two handles. Beware of the wrong one."7 In life, too often, the not the true scholar the only true master? But, as the old oracle said, "All animate the last fibre of organization, the outskirts of nature, by insight. analogy, identity in the most remote parts. The ambitious soul sits down before each refractory fact, one after another, reduces all strange constitutions, all new powers, to their class and their law, and goes on forever to measure of planetary motion. The chemist finds proportions and intelligiomer discovers that geometry, a pure abstraction of the human mind, is the cation but the perceiving that these objects are not chaotic, and are not foreign, but have a law which is also a law of the human mind? The astronher splendors shine, system on system shooting like rays, upward, downward, without centre, without circumference,—in the mass and in the particle nature hastens to render account of herself to the mind. Classification begins. ble method throughout matter: and science is nothing but the finding of been a constant accumulation and classifying of facts. But what is classifiunder ground, whereby contrary and remote things cohere, and flower out on tying things together, diminishing anomalies, discovering roots running three thousand; and so, tyrannized over by its own unifying instinct, it goes finds how to join two things, and see in them one nature; then three, then his mind. What is nature to him? There is never a beginning, there is never an end to the inexplicable continuity of this web of God, but always circular wistful and admiring before this great spectacle. He must settle its value in stars. Ever the winds blow; ever the grass grows. Every day, men and women, conversing, beholding and beholden. The scholar must needs stand from one stem. It presently learns, that, since the dawn of history, there has To the young mind, every thing is individual, stands by itself. By and by, it ning, whose ending he never can find—so entire, so boundless. Far, too, as I. The first in time and the first in importance of the influences upon the mind is that of nature. Every day, the sun; and, after sunset, night and her power returning into itself. Therein it resembles his own spirit, whose begin-attainments. So much of nature as he is ignorant of, so much of his own ward to an ever expanding knowledge as to a becoming creator. He shall see the laws of his own mind. Nature then becomes to him the measure of his seal, and one is print. Its beauty is the beauty of his own mind. Its laws are that nature is the opposite of the soul, answering to it part for part. One is that now is, is only the first gropings of its gigantic hand, he shall look for he has learned to worship the soul, and to see that the natural philosophy the soul of his soul?—A thought too bold—a dream too wild. Yet when this spiritual light shall have revealed the law of more earthly natures,--when relation, sympathy, stirring in every vein. And what is that Root? Is not that gested, that he and it proceed from one root; one is leaf and one is flower; Thus to him, to this school-boy under the bending dome of day, is sug-

<sup>4.</sup> The North Star. "Harp": Lyra, a northern constellation, which includes the bright star Vega.

self," and the modern precept, "Study nature," become at last one maxim. mind does he not yet possess. And, in fine, the ancient precept, "Know thy-and perhaps we shall get at the truth-learn the amount of this influence that mind is inscribed. Books are the best type of the influence of the past, the Past,-in whatever form, whether of literature, of art, of institutions, II. The next great influence8 into the spirit of the scholar, is, the mind of endures, it now flies, it now inspires. Precisely in proportion to the depth of mind from which it issued, so high does it soar, so long does it sing. was—dead fact; now, it is quick9 thought. It can stand, and it can go. It now own mind, and uttered it again. It came into him-life; it went out from more conveniently—by considering their value alone.

The theory of books is noble. The scholar of the first age received into immortal thoughts. It came to him-business; it went from him-poetry. It him-truth. It came to him-short-lived actions; it went out from himhim the world around; brooded thereon; gave it the new arrangement of his artist entirely exclude the conventional, the local, the perishable from his As no air-pump can by any means make a perfect vacuum, so neither can any next succeeding. The books of an older period will not fit this. age, it is found, must write its own books; or rather, each generation for the to a remote posterity, as to cotemporaries, or rather to the second age. Each book, or write a book of pure thought that shall be as efficient, in all respects, the purity and imperishableness of the product be. But none is quite perfect. Or, I might say, it depends on how far the process had gone, of transmuting life into truth. In proportion to the completeness of the distillation, so will act of creation,—the act of thought,—is instantly transferred to the record. who set out from accepted dogmas, not from their own sight of principles. Meek young men grow up in libraries, believing it their duty to accept the the book is perfect; as love of the hero corrupts into worship of his statue. Instantly, the book becomes noxious. The guide is a tyrant. We sought a divine also. The writer was a just and wise spirit. Henceforward it is settled, The poet chanting, was felt to be a divine man. Henceforth the chant is thinkers, not by Man Thinking; by men of talent, that is, who start wrong, cry, if it is disparaged. Colleges are built on it. Books are written on it by opened, having once received this book, stands upon it, and makes an outtude, always slow to open to the incursions of Reason, having once so brother, and lo, a governor. The sluggish and perverted mind of the multiviews which Cicero, which Locke, which Bacon have given, forgetful that Cicero, Locke and Bacon were only young men in libraries when they wrote Yet hence arises a grave mischief. The sacredness which attaches to the learned class, who value books, as such; not as related to nature and the human constitution, but as making a sort of Third Estate<sup>3</sup> with the world and Hence, instead of Man Thinking, we have the bookworm. Hence, the book cerning Human Understanding (1690) before he was forty. Sin Francis Bacon (1561–1626), English statesman and philosopher, is best known for his

of all degrees. the soul. Hence, the restorers of readings, the emendators, the bibliomaniacs words; manners, actions, words, that is, indicative of no custom or authority, a divine presence. Whatever talents may be, if the man create not, the pure never see a book than to be warped by its attraction clean out of my own orbit, and made a satellite instead of a system. The one thing in the world of used; abused, among the worst. What is the right use? What is the one end efflux4 of the Deity is not his:—cinders and smoke, there may be, but not yet always looks forward. The eyes of man are set in his forehead, not in his gressive. The book, the college, the school of art, the institution of any kind, value, is, the active soul, ---the soul, free, sovereign, active. This every man is which all means go to effect? They are for nothing but to inspire. I had better flame. There are creative manners, there are creative actions, and creative hindhead. Man hopes. Genius creates. To create,—to create,—is the proof of by this. They pin me down. They look backward and not forward. But genius stop with some past utterance of genius. This is good, say they,—let us hold there a favorite, but the sound estate of every man. In its essence, it is protruth, or creates. In this action, it is genius; not the privilege of here and obstructed, and as yet unborn. The soul active sees absolute truth; and utters entitled to; this every man contains within him, although in almost all men, This is bad; this is worse than it seems. Books are the best of things, wel spearized now for two hundred years. is always sufficiently the enemy of genius by over-influence. The literature of every nation bear me witness. The English dramatic poets have Shakof solitude, inquest and self-recovery, and a fatal disservice is done. Genius another mind its truth, though it were in torrents of light, without periods but springing spontaneous from the mind's own sense of good and fair.

On the other part, instead of being its own seer, let it receive always from again, where the dawn is. We hear that we may speak. The Arabian proverb Undoubtedly, there is a right way of reading,—so it be sternly subordinated. Man Thinking must not be subdued by his instruments. Books are to the lamps which were kindled by their ray to guide our steps to the East not, when the sun is hid, and the stars withdraw their shining,—we repair the intervals of darkness come, as come they must,—when the soul seeth precious to be wasted in other men's transcripts of their readings. But when for the scholar's idle times. When he can read God directly, the hour is too books. They impress us ever with the conviction that one nature wrote and the same reads. We read the verses of one of the great English poets, of Chaucer, of Marvell, of Dryden,<sup>5</sup> with the most modern joy,—with a pleasays, "A fig tree looking on a fig tree, becometh fruitful."

It is remarkable, the character of the pleasure we derive from the best ago, says that which lies close to my own soul, that which I also had well when this poet, who lived in some past world, two or three hundred years sure, I mean, which is in great part caused by the abstraction of all time sophical doctrine of the identity of all minds, we should suppose some nigh thought and said. But for the evidence thence afforded to the philofrom their verses. There is some awe mixed with the joy of our surprise, Inflowing.

 Living. "Business": busyness, activity.
 Breathes in. "Go": walk.
 Breathes in. "Go": walk.
 As a young man Marcus Tullius Cicero (106–143 B.C.E.), Roman statesman, was renowned for his oratory. John Locke (1632–1704), English phihis oratory. John Locke (1632–1704), English phi-3. The term "Third Estate" is based on an obsolete social classification: first the clergy, second who lay up food before death for the young grub they shall never see. preparation of stores for their future wants, like the fact observed in insects, pre-established harmony, some foresight of souls that were to be, and some labor and invention, the page of whatever book we read becomes luminous wealth of the Indies, must carry out the wealth of the Indies." There is then an inventor to read well. As the proverb says, "He that would bring home the be nourished on any food, though it were boiled grass and the broth of shoes, so the human mind can be fed by any knowledge. And great and heroic men so is its record, perchance, the least part of his volume. The discerning will our author is as broad as the world. We then see, what is always true, that with manifold allusion. Every sentence is doubly significant, and the sense of creative reading, as well as creative writing. When the mind is braced by I only would say, that it needs a strong head to bear that diet. One must be have existed, who had almost no other information than by the printed page. instincts, to underrate the Book. We all know, that as the human body can times Plato's and Shakspeare's. utterances of the oracle,—and all the rest he rejects, were it never so many read in his Plato or Shakspeare, only that least part,—only the authentic as the seer's hour of vision is short and rare among heavy days and months, I would not be hurried by any love of system, by any exaggeration of

can only highly serve us, when they aim not to drill, but to create; when they colleges will recede in their public importance whilst they grow richer every Gowns, and pecuniary foundations, though of towns of gold, can never coungather from far every ray of various genius to their hospitable halls, and, by History and exact science he must learn by laborious reading. Colleges, in tervail the least sentence or syllable of wit. 6 Forget this, and our American knowledge are natures in which apparatus and pretension avail nothing the concentrated fires, set the hearts of their youth on flame. Thought and like manner, have their indispensable office,—to teach elements. But they Of course, there is a portion of reading quite indispensable to a wise man

III. There goes in the world a notion that the scholar should be a recluse, a valetudinarian, —as unfit for any handiwork or public labor, as a penknife passes from the unconscious to the conscious, is action. Only so much do see its beauty. Inaction is cowardice, but there can be no scholar without Whilst the world hangs before the eye as a cloud of beauty, we can not even out it, he is not yet man. Without it, thought can never ripen into truth just and wise. Action is with the scholar subordinate, but it is essential. Withcates for their celibacy. As far as this is true of the studious classes, it is not speech. They are often virtually disfranchised; and, indeed, there are advoconversation of men they do not hear, but only a mincing and diluted scholars of their day,—are addressed as women: that the rough, spontaneous that the clergy,—who are always more universally than any other class, the because they speculate or see, they could do nothing. I have heard it said for an axe. The so called "practical men" sneer at speculative men, as if, the heroic mind. The preamble of thought, the transition through which it with myself. I launch eagerly into this resounding tumult. I grasp the hands attractions are the keys which unlock my thoughts and make me acquainted past by, as a loss of power. eloquence and wisdom. The true scholar grudges every opportunity of action to his discourse. Drudgery, calamity, exasperation, want, are instructers in his nap, to spare any action in which he can partake. It is pearls and rubies dominion. I do not see how any man can afford, for the sake of his nerves and ness have I vanquished and planted, or so far have I extended my being, my order; I dissipate its fear; I dispose of it within the circuit of my expanding by an instinct that so shall the dumb abyss be vocal with speech. I pierce its of those next me, and take my place in the ring to suffer and to work, taught life. So much only of life as I know by experience, so much of the wilder-The world,—this shadow of the soul, or other me, lies wide around. Its forward at all hours. ucts. A strange process too, this, by which experience is converted into thought, as a mulberry leaf is converted into satin.8 The manufacture goes It is the raw material out of which the intellect moulds her splendid prod-too, the impossibility of antedating this act. In its grub state, it cannot fly, it cannot shine,—it is a dull grub. But suddenly, without observation, the raised, transfigured; the corruptible has put on incorruption.9 Always now the life like a ripe fruit, to become a thought of the mind. Instantly, it is our body. The new deed is yet a part of life,—remains for a time immersed no more feel or know it, than we feel the feet, or the hand, or the brain of are quite unable to speculate. Our affections as yet circulate through it. We recent actions,—with the business which we now have in hand. On this we calmest observation. They lie like fair pictures in the air. Not so with our soar and sing. selfsame thing unfurls beautiful wings, and is an angel of wisdom. So is it is an object of beauty, however base its origin and neighborhood. Observe, in our unconscious life. In some contemplative hour, it detaches itself from relative, profession and party, town and country, nation and world, must also another fact that once filled the whole sky, are gone already; friend and boys, and dogs, and ferules,2 the love of little maids and berries, and many into the empyrean. Cradle and infancy, school and playground, the fear of later, lose its adhesive inert form, and astonish us by soaring from our body there no fact, no event, in our private history, which shall not, sooner or The actions and events of our childhood and youth are now matters of

> I know, as I have lived. Instantly, we know whose words are loaded with life and whose not.

Of course, he who has put forth his total strength in fit actions, has the richest return of wisdom. I will not shut myself out of this globe of action and transplant an oak into a flower pot, there to hunger and pine; nor trust shepherdesses, and smoking Dutchmen, for all Europe, went out one day to like those Savoyards,3 who, getting their livelihood by carving shepherds, the revenue of some single faculty, and exhaust one vein of thought, much

<sup>8.</sup> A form of silk produced by silkworms, which feed on mulberry leaves.
9. "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality" (I

The highest reaches of heaven.
 Rods used for punishing children.
 Savoy is in the western Alps, where France, Italy, and Switzerland converge.

their vein, and who, moved by a commendable prudence, sail for Greece or replenish their merchantable stock.4 Palestine, follow the trapper into the prairie, or ramble round Algiers last of their pine trees. Authors we have in numbers, who have written out the mountain to find stock, and discovered that they had whittled up the

the field and the workyard made. way to learn grammar. Colleges and books only copy the language which whence we get tiles and copestones for the masonry of to-day. This is the poverty or the splendor of his speech. Life lies behind us as the quarry from facts a language, by which to illustrate and embody our perceptions. I learn men and women; in science; in art; to the one end of mastering in all their the insight into trades and manufactures; in frank intercourse with many immediately from any speaker how much he has already lived, through the Life is our dictionary. Years are well spent in country labors; in town—in If it were only for a vocabulary the scholar would be covetous of action called them, are the law of nature because they are the law of spirit. that it is a resource. That great principle of Undulation in nature, that shows name of Polarity,--these "fits of easy transmission and reflection," as Newton deeply ingrained in every atom and every fluid, is known to us under the ebb and flow of the sea, in day and night, in heat and cold, and as yet more itself in the inspiring and expiring of the breath; in desire and satiety; in the But the final value of action, like that of books, and better than books, is

A great soul will be strong to live, as well as strong to think. Does he lack organ or medium to impart his truths? He can still fall back on this elemensacred germ of his instinct screened from influence. What is lost in seemliness is gained in strength. Not out of those on whom systems of education grandeur of justice shine in his affairs. Let the beauty of affection cheer his tal force of living them. This is a total act. Thinking is a partial act. Let the when thoughts are no longer apprehended, and books are a weariness,—he that the scholar loses no hour which the man lives. Herein he unfolds the can be measured by any public and designed display. Time shall teach him is the function. Living is the functionary. The stream retreats to its source. has always the resource to live. Character is higher than intellect. Thinking the artist has exhausted his materials, when the fancy no longer paints, to build the new, but out of unhandselled6 savage nature, out of terrible have exhausted their culture, comes the helpful giant to destroy the old or force of his constitution in the doings and passages of the day better than it Druids and Berserkirs, come at last Alfred7 and Shakspear. lowly roof. Those "far from fame" who dwell and act with him, will feel the The mind now thinks; now acts; and each fit reproduces the other. When and necessity of labor to every citizen. There is virtue yet in the hoe and the spade, for learned as well as for unlearned hands. And labor is every where I hear therefore with joy whatever is beginning to be said of the dignity cian.

6. A handsel is a gift to express good wishes at the outset of some enterprise; apparently Emerson uses "unhandselled" to mean something like

4. Likely references to Emerson's contemporaries: Nathaniel Parker Willis (1806–1867), editor and travel writer; Washington Irving, whose A Tour on the Prairies appeared in 1835; and James Fenimore Cooper, whose The Prairie was published in 1827.

5. From the Optics (1704) of Sir Isaac Newton 1827.

7. The enlightened 9th-century king of the West Saxons. "Terrible Druids and Berserkirs": unciv-Celts and Anglo-Saxons.

the popular judgments and modes of action. that a man shall not for the sake of wider activity sacrifice any opinion to welcome; always we are invited to work; only be this limitation observed,

I have now spoken of the education of the scholar by nature, by books, events of to-day,—this he shall hear and promulgate. verdict Reason from her inviolable seat pronounces on the passing men and world of actions,—these he shall receive and impart. And whatsoever new in all emergencies, in all solemn hours has uttered as its commentary on the verse, and the conclusions of history. Whatsoever oracles the human heart serving and communicating heroic sentiments, noble biographies, melodious is to resist the vulgar prosperity that retrogrades ever to barbarism, by preand illustrious thoughts. He is the world's eye. He is the world's heart. He solation in exercising the highest functions of human nature. He is one who educated society. For all this loss and scorn, what offset? He is to find conthe frequent uncertainty and loss of time which are the nettles and tangling vines in the way of the self-relying and self-directed; and the state of virtual hostility in which he seems to stand to society, and especially to cross of making his own, and, of course, the self accusation, the faint heart, accepting the fashions, the education, the religion of society, he takes the an ignorance and shiftlessness in popular arts, incurring the disdain of the able who shoulder him aside. Long he must stammer in his speech; often being splendid and useful, honor is sure. But he, in his private observatory, cataloguing obscure and nebulous stars of the human mind, which as yet raises himself from private considerations, and breathes and lives on public erty and solitude. For the ease and pleasure of treading the old road, unpaid task of observation. Flamsteed and Herschel, in their glazed<sup>8</sup> obserand by action. It remains to say somewhat of his duties.

They are such as become Man Thinking. They may all be comprised in immediate fame. In the long period of his preparation, he must betray often for a few facts; correcting still his old records;—must relinquish display and no man has thought of as such, watching days and months, sometimes, vatory, may catalogue the stars with the praise of all men, and the results showing them facts amidst appearances. He plies the slow, unhonored, and self-trust. The office of the scholar is to cheer, to raise, and to guide men by forego the living for the dead. Worse yet, he must accept—how often! povsome fetish of a government, some ephemeral trade, or war, or man, is cried up by half mankind and cried down by the other half, as if all depended on self, and to defer never to the popular cry. He and he only knows the world own time,—happy enough if he can satisfy himself alone that this day he has tion to observation; patient of neglect, patient of reproach, and bide his steadiness, in severe abstraction, let him hold by himself; add observaand honorable of the earth affirm it to be the crack of doom. In silence, in Let him not quit his belief that a popgun is a popgun, though the ancient the poorest thought which the scholar has lost in listening to the controversy. this particular up or down. The odds are that the whole question is not worth The world of any moment is the merest appearance. Some great decorum, These being his functions, it becomes him to feel all confidence in him-seen something truly. Success treads on every right step. For the instinct is sure that prompts him to tell his brother what he thinks. He then learns that in going down into the secrets of his own mind, he has descended into the secrets of all minds. He learns that he who has mastered any law in his private thoughts, is master to that extent of all men whose language he speaks, and of all into whose language his own can be translated. The poet in utter solitude remembering his spontaneous thoughts and recording them, is found to have recorded that which men in "cities vast" find true for them also. The orator distrusts at first the fitness of his frank confessions,—his want of knowledge of the persons he addresses,—until he finds that he is the complement of his hearers;—that they drink his words because he fulfils for them their own nature; the deeper he dives into his privatest secretest presentiment,—to his wonder he finds, this is the most acceptable, most public, and universally true. The people delight in it; the better part of every man feels, This is my music: this is myself.

<sup>8.</sup> Glass-roofed. John Flamsteed (1646–1719), English astronomer, first royal astronomer at Greenwich.

gerous times, arise from the presumption that like children and women, his is a protected class; or if he seek a temporary peace by the diversion of his side, and can henceforth defy it, and pass on superior. The world is his who can see through its pretension. What deafness, what stone-blind custom, a thing which a scholar by his very function puts behind him. Fear always what overgrown error you behold, is there only by sufferance,-by your sufof its nature and extent; he will have made his hands meet on the other lies no great way back; he will then find in himself a perfect comprehension search its nature, inspect its origin—see the whelping of this lion,—which boy whistles to keep his courage up. So is the danger a danger still: so is the the flowering bushes, peeping into microscopes, and turning rhymes, as a thoughts from politics or vexed questions, hiding his head like an ostrich in springs from ignorance. It is a shame to him if his tranquillity, amid danhindrance that does not arise out of his own constitution." Brave; for fear is be,—free and brave. Free even to the definition of freedom, "without any fear worse. Manlike let him turn and face it. Let him look into its eye and ferance. See it to be a lie, and you have already dealt it its mortal blow. In self-trust, all the virtues are comprehended. Free should the scholar

Yes, we are the cowed,—we the trustless. It is a mischievous notion that we are come late into nature; that the world was finished a long time ago. As the world was plastic and fluid in the hands of God, so it is ever to so much of his attributes as we bring to it. To ignorance and sin, it is flint. They adapt themselves to it as they may; but in proportion as a man has anything in him divine, the firmament flows before him, and takes his signet and form. Not he is great who can alter matter, but he who can alter my state of mind. They are the kings of the world who give the color of their present thought to all nature and all art, and persuade men by the cheerful serenity of their carrying the matter, that this thing which they do, is the apple which the ages have desired to pluck, now at last ripe, and inviting nations to the harvest. The great man makes the great thing. Wherever Macdonald sits, there is the head of the table. Linnæus makes botany the most alluring of studies and wins it from the farmer and the herb-woman. Davy, chemistry: and Cuvier, fossils. The day is always his, who works in it with serenity and great aims. The unstable estimates of men crowd to him whose mind is filled with a truth, as the heaped waves of the Atlantic follow the moon.

For this self-trust, the reason is deeper than can be fathomed,—darker than can be enlightened. I might not carry with me the feeling of my audience in stating my own belief. But I have already shown the ground of my hope, in adverting to the doctrine that man is one. I believe man has been wronged: he has wronged himself. He has almost lost the light that can lead him back to his prerogatives. Men are become of no account. Men in history, men in the world of to-day are bugs, are spawn, and are called "the mass" and "the herd." In a century, in a millennium, one or two men; that is to say—one or two approximations to the right state of every man. All the rest behold in the hero or the poet their own green and crude being—ripened; yes, and are content to be less, so that may attain to its full stature. What a testimony—full of grandeur, full of pity, is borne to the demands of his own nature, by the poor clansman, the poor partisan, who rejoices in the glory of his chief. The poor and the low find some amends to their immense moral capacity, for their acquiescence in a political and social inferiority. They are content to be brushed like flies from the path of a great person, so that justice shall be done by him to that common nature which it is the dearest desire of all to see enlarged and glorified. They sun themselves in the great man's light, and feel it to be their own element. They cast the dignity of man from their downtrod selves upon the shoulders of a hero, and will perish to add one drop of blood to make that great heart beat, those giant sinews combat and conquer. He lives for us, and we live in him.

Men such as they are, very naturally seek money or power; and power because it is as good as money,—the "spoils," so called, "of office." And why not? for they aspire to the highest, and this, in their sleep-walking, they dream is highest. Wake them, and they shall quit the false good and leap to the true, and leave government to clerks and desks. This revolution is to be wrought by the gradual domestication of the idea of Culture. The main enterprise of the world for splendor, for extent, is the upbuilding of a man. Here are the materials strown along the ground. The private life of one man shall be a more illustrious monarchy,—more formidable to its enemy, more sweet and serene in its influence to its friend, than any kingdom in history. For a man, rightly viewed, comprehendeth the particular natures of all men. Each philosopher, each bard, each actor, has only done for me, as by a delegate, what one day I can do for myself. The books which once we valued more than the apple of the eye, we have quite exhausted. What is that but saying that we have come up with the point of view which the universal mind took through the eyes of that one scribe; we have been that man, and have passed on. First, one; then another; we drain all cisterns, and waxing greater by all these supplies, we crave a better and more abundant food. The man has never lived that can feed us ever. The human mind cannot be enshrined in a person who shall set a barrier on any one side to this unbounded, unboundable empire. It is one central fire which flaming now out of the lips out of a thousand stars. It is one soul which animates all men. of Etna, lightens the capes of Sicily; and now out of the throat of Vesuvius, illuminates the towers and vineyards of Naples. It is one light which beams the time and to this country. I ought not to delay longer to add what I have to say, of nearer reference to But I have dwelt perhaps tediously upon this abstraction of the Scholar.

mind through all individuals, I do not much dwell on these differences. In age. With the views I have intimated of the oneness or the identity of the of the Classic, of the Romantic, and now of the Reflective or Philosophical dominate over successive epochs, and there are data for marking the genius tion in the leading idea may be distinctly enough traced. the youth, romantic; the adult, reflective. I deny not, however, that a revolufact, I believe each individual passes through all three. The boy is a Greek, Historically, there is thought to be a difference in the ideas which prewith Hamlet's unhappiness, sists. We are lined with eyes. We see with our feet. The time is infected cannot enjoy any thing for hankering to know whereof the pleasure con-We, it seems, are critical. We are embarrassed with second thoughts. We Our age is bewailed as the age of Introversion. Must that needs be evil?

"Sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought."4 and regret the coming state as untried; as a boy dreads the water before he the fact that they find themselves not in the state of mind of their fathers, side by side, and admit of being compared; when the energies of all men are has learned that he can swim. If there is any period one would desire to be I look upon the discontent of the literary class as a mere announcement of Do we fear lest we should outsee nature and God, and drink truth dry? compensated by the rich possibilities of the new era? This time, like all searched by fear and by hope; when the historic glories of the old, can be born in,—is it not the age of Revolution; when the old and the new stand times, is a very good one, if we but know what to do with it. Is it so bad then? Sight is the last thing to be pitied. Would we be blind?

through church and state. glimmer already through poetry and art, through philosophy and science, I read with joy some of the auspicious signs of the coming days as they denly found to be richer than all foreign parts. The literature of the poor, the feelings of the child, the philosophy of the street, the meaning of which had been negligently trodden under foot by those who were harnessbeautiful, the near, the low, the common, was explored and poetised. That elevation of what was called the lowest class in the state, assumed in literait not? of new vigor, when the extremities are made active, when currents of ing and provisioning themselves for long journies into far countries, is sudture a very marked and as benign an aspect. Instead of the sublime and remote, the romantic; what is doing in Italy or Arabia; what is Greek art, or warm life run into the hands and the feet. I ask not for the great, the household life, are the topics of the time. It is a great stride. It is a sign—is One of these signs is the fact that the same movement which effected the > sing;—and the world lies no longer a dull miscellany and lumber room,7 but and the ledger, referred to the like cause by which light undulates and poets suburbs and extremities of nature; let me see every trifle bristling with the ence of the highest spiritual cause lurking, as always it does lurk, in these show me the ultimate reason of these matters;—show me the sublime presnews of the boat; the glance of the eye; the form and the gait of the body; antique and future worlds. What would we really know the meaning of of the familiar, the low. Give me insight into to-day, and you may have the unites and animates the farthest pinnacle and the lowest trench. has form and order; there is no trifle; there is no puzzle; but one design polarity that ranges it instantly on an eternal law; and the shop, the plough, The meal in the firkin; the milk in the pan; the ballad in the street; the Provençal Minstrelsy;<sup>5</sup> I embrace the common, I explore and sit at the feet small ocean. A man is related to all nature. This perception of the worth of the the moderns, has shown us, as none ever did, the genius of the ancients. vulgar, is fruitful in discoveries. Goethe, in this very thing the most modern of and wondrous than things remote. The near explains the far. The drop is a style of Pope, of Johnson, of Gibbon, looks cold and pedantic. This writing is ently followed and with various success. In contrast with their writing, the newer time, of Goethe, Wordsworth, and Carlyle.8 This idea they have differblood-warm. Man is surprised to find that things near are not less beautiful This idea has inspired the genius of Goldsmith, Burns, Cowper, and in a evil to the foul material forms, and has given in epical parables a theory of and showed the connexion between nature and the affections of the soul. course, must have difficulty which no genius could surmount. But he saw sophical Ethics on the popular Christianity of his time. Such an attempt, of precision of a mathematician, he endeavored to engraft a purely philoinsanity, of beasts, of unclean and fearful things. the lower parts of nature; he showed the mysterious bond that allies moral gible world. Especially did his shade-loving muse hover over and interpret He pierced the emblematic or spiritual character of the visible, audible, tan-Emanuel Swedenborg.1 The most imaginative of men, yet writing with the life, whose literary value has never yet been rightly estimated;—I mean There is one man of genius who has done much for this philosophy of with man as a sovereign state with a sovereign state;—tends to true union man in God's wide earth is either willing or able to help any other man." as well as greatness. "I learned," said the melancholy Pestalozzi,2 "that no respect, so that each man shall feel the world is his, and man shall treat tends to insulate the individual,—to surround him with barriers of natural ment is, the new importance given to the single person. Every thing that Another sign of our times, also marked by an analogous political move-

<sup>5.</sup> Music of the medieval troubadours Provence, in southeastern France.

Small wooden vessel.

<sup>8.</sup> Emerson contrasts the so-called pre-Romantics Oliver Goldsmith (1730-1794), Robert Burns (1759-1796), and William Cowper (1731-1800) with the Romantics Johann Wolfgang von Goethe (1749-1832), William Wordsworth (1770-1850), and Thomas Carlyle (1795-1881). Junk room.

Pope (1688–1744), Samuel Johnson (1709–1784), and Edward Gibbon (1737–1794).

1. Swedish scientist, theologian, and mystic (1688–1772). Emerson was inspired by Swedenborg's notion of the correspondence between the natural and spiritual worlds.

2. Johann Heinrich Pestalozzi (1746–1827), Swiss educator who was an early advocate of kindergarten education. His theories influenced several of Emerson's friends.

you know not yet how a globule of sap ascends; in yourself slumbers the whole of Reason; it is for you to know all, it is for you to dare all. Mr. Presischolar is decent, indolent, complaisant. See already the tragic consequence tame. Public and private avarice make the air we breathe thick and fat. The spirit of the American freeman is already suspected to be timid, imitative, belongs by all motives, by all prophecy, by all preparation, to the American Scholar. We have listened too long to the courtly muses of Europe. The dent and Gentlemen, this confidence in the unsearched might of man, past, all the hopes of the future. He must be an university of knowledges. If take up into himself all the ability of the time, all the contributions of the Help must come from the bosom alone. The scholar is that man who must see, and thousands of young men as hopeful now crowding to the barriers of disgust,-some of them suicides. What is the remedy? They did not yet principles on which business is managed inspire, and turn drudges, or die son with these,—but are hindered from action by the disgust which the winds, shined upon by all the stars of God, find the earth below not in uniis no work for any but the decorous and the complaisant. Young men of the The world is nothing, the man is all; in yourself is the law of all nature, and there be one lesson more than another which should pierce his ear, it is, which we belong; and our opinion predicted geographically, as the north, or the south. Not so, brothers and friends,—please God, ours shall not be so. that peculiar fruit which each man was created to bear, but to be reckoned in the gross, in the hundred, or the thousand, of the party, the section, to fairest promise, who begin life upon our shores, inflated by the mountain The mind of this country taught to aim at low objects, eats upon itself. There will for the first time exist, because each believes himself inspired by the shall be a wall of defence and a wreath of love around all. A nation of men world, not to be an unit;--not to be reckoned one character;--not to yield prevalent, the conversion of the world. Is it not the chief disgrace in the the study and the communication of principles, the making those instincts pany; and for solace, the perspective of your own infinite life; and for work, Patience—patience;—with the shades of all the good and great for combly on his instincts, and there abide, the huge world will come round to him Divine Soul which also inspires all men. doubt, and for sensual indulgence. The dread of man and the love of man speak our own minds. Then shall man be no longer a name for pity, for We will walk on our own feet; we will work with our own hands; we will for the career, do not yet see, that if the single man plant himself indomita-

1837

The Divinity School Address

In this refulgent summer it has been a luxury to draw the breath of life. The grass grows, the buds burst, the meadow is spotted with fire and gold in to every faculty of man! In its fruitful soils; in its navigable sea; in its mountains of metal and stone; in its forests of all woods; in its animals; in its of cities, and the captains, history delights to honor. The planters, the mechanics, the inventors, the astronomers, the builders life, is it well worth the pith and heart of great men to subdue and enjoy it. chemical ingredients; in the powers and path of light, heat, attraction, and converse. How wide; how rich; what invitation from every property it gives bounty goes forward, has not yielded yet one word of explanation. One is constrained to respect the perfection of this world, in which our senses dealt to all creatures, and the never-broken silence with which the old was never displayed more happily. The corn and the wine have been freely and prepares his eyes again for the crimson dawn. The mystery of nature and his huge globe a toy. The cool night bathes the world as with a river, the stars their almost spiritual rays. Man under them seems a young child, heart with its welcome shade. Through the transparent darkness pour pine, the balm-of-Gilead,2 and the new hay. Night brings no gloom to the the tint of flowers. The air is full of birds, and sweet with the breath of the

Behold these outrunning laws, which our imperfect apprehension can see tend this way and that, but not come full circle. Behold these infinite relaadmire forever. These works of thought have been the entertainments of the asks the human spirit with a curiosity new-kindled, but never to be quenched. once into a mere illustration and fable of this mind. What am IF and What is? human spirit in all ages. tions, so like, so unlike; many, yet one. I would study, I would know, I would universe, and make things what they are, then shrinks the great world at But the moment the mind opens, and reveals the laws which traverse the well pleased. wirtuous, but virtue;'—then is the end of the creation answered, and God is me: thee will I serve, day and night, in great, in small, that I may be not that, to the good, to the perfect, he is born, low as he now lies in evil and weakness. That which he venerates is still his own, though he has not realized it yet. He ought. He knows the sense of that grand word, though his by intellectual perception, he attains to say,—'I love the Right; Truth is beautiful within and without, forevermore. Virtue, I am thine: save me: use analysis fails entirely to render account of it. When in innocency, or when A more secret, sweet, and overpowering beauty appears to man when his heart and mind open to the sentiment of virtue. Then instantly he is instructed in what is above him. He learns that his being is without bound and in the game of human life, love, fear, justice, appetite, man, and God, under what seem foolish details, principles that astonish. The child amidst tain divine laws. It perceives that this homely game of life we play, covers, his baubles, is learning the action of light, motion, gravity, muscular force; interact. These laws refuse to be adequately stated. They will not by us or The sentiment of virtue is a reverence and delight in the presence of ceris followed here, though with the title used in Nature, Addresses, and Lectures (1849). Attacks on Emerson for questioning the unique divinity of Jesus Christ appeared in newspapers and pamphlets, and Emerson cautioned himself in his privately or publicly and was not invited back to Harvard for three decades.

An aromatic poplar tree, named for the curative resin associated with Gilead in Jeremiah 8.22: "Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no